Liberal Party
~~Elections~~

Centre for Nfld Studies

There will be a new Government in Newfoundland after October 28.

A new party will be in office.

A new party, with new people, new ideas,
new approaches to the problems of our changing times,
new vigor, and new strength.

The victory that this new political force will win on election day will climax three years of planning, organization, expansion, and hard work on the part of thousands of Newfoundlanders.

A new era for Newfoundland and Labrador.

It will be a dream come true.

And a promise made good.

This is the story of that dream, that promise and the man who made it, that new party, and that new era.

A new Party. A new era.

The story.

The story could be traced back as far as 1949, when Joseph Roberts Smallwood—the legendary “Joey” of National Convention days—saw his crusade to bring Newfoundland into the Canadian Confederation crowned with success. He had changed the course of Newfoundland and Canadian history. He had become the most famous political leader Newfoundland had ever known. He formed and led the Liberal Party in the new Province, and began an unprecedented 22-year administration as Liberal Premier.

But this particular story began more recently. In June of 1968.

On the 25th day of that month, the Newfoundland people elected six Conservatives and only one Liberal to the House of Commons in Ottawa. It was the first time since Confederation that the Liberals had lost a Federal election—or any election—in Newfoundland.

It was a crushing blow to a mighty party.

But then, it was a difficult time politically. There were economic reverses. Life was tougher than it had been at any time since 1949. Across the Canadian nation, and indeed around the world, there were signs of unrest economically and politically. New generations of young people were starting to participate in politics, and the vote for change or the vote for protest was becoming a serious factor in any election campaign.

What was good in the past was not good enough for the future.

The Liberal Party in Newfoundland and Labrador had two choices after June 25, 1968. They could have dismissed the defeat as a flash-in-the-pan, a temporary set-back, a political freak, and carried on as they had for the previous 19 years. Or they could have faced facts, taken a hard look at the changing social, political, and economic situation at home and abroad, and engaged in serious self-analysis to determine how they should adapt to meet the needs of the Newfoundland people in the future.

They chose the latter course.

It was not an easy thing to do. It is difficult for a strong force, that had known only victory, to admit that it had lost a battle. But it was vital to the future of the Party, and to the Newfoundland people, that any faults should be discovered and remedied. It was vital that the Party listen intently to the people, and that the people participate in the creation of a new Party and a new Province.

But the Liberals were ready and able to meet this challenge.

Premier Smallwood told the news media: “The tide has gone out for the Liberal Party”.

But he added: “There is one thing about the tide. It always comes back.”

Then he pledged himself and his fellow Liberals to the task of building a new Party; the kind of political party that Newfoundland and Labrador had never seen. A party of tens of thousands of participating members involving themselves politically in the affairs of the Province through an extensive network of district associations. A party with new faces, with young blood, with ideas and energy and talent to serve the Newfoundland people in a complex, demanding world.

This objective became his constant companion.

He was aided by other Liberals with the same conviction.

They were determined to re-organize the entire Party structure, to rejuvenate the Party. Literally, to build a new Party.

The new faces and the new ideas began to appear. Some of them very quietly, some of them very much in the background. But they were there, and their presence became a strong force in the shaping of Party policy.

However, the drive toward organization, democratization, and public participation brought some casualties.

Progress of this kind usually brings dissent. When people become involved, they become affected emotionally. When opinions are expressed freely and openly, a difference of these opinions must be expected. This is a good sign of a healthy Party.

Premier Smallwood, whose plan was to rebuild the Party and then retire in favor of new leadership and their new methods, could not leave until the Party was united in purpose and principle.

That question was to be decided on November 1, 1969.

The Premier had called the first Liberal Party Leadership Convention for that date, and he decided to contest the election when it became clear that dissident forces were endangering the Party. Over 1,700 Liberals attended the Convention—the greatest in Newfoundland political history—and 1,070 of them voted for “Joey” Smallwood to carry on as Leader so that the job of building the strong new Liberal Party could continue.

It was an incredible political victory for an amazing politician. The news was flashed across the nation how “Joey,” the man who was the only living Father of Confederation, the man who had remained Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador for 20 years, had overcome the political set-back of 1968 and the dissension of 1969 to be re-elected chief of his newly-reorganized Liberal Party. Indeed the tide had come in.

It was a feat that likely will never be equalled.

The name of Smallwood was carved forever in a special niche in history.

But the big job still remained to be done.

The organization work in the Party had to be completed.

Mr. Smallwood had said: “A leader must devote his energy, his skill, his experience; he must use that strength to reunite, and to reconcile.”

And the next Provincial election had to be won.

As he said in that moment of victory on November 1, 1969:

“My purpose is to get the Liberal Party ready, the Liberal Government ready, eager and prepared—for two years from now...”

Then the promise would be fulfilled; and the dream come true.

The Party is now ready.

During the past two years, the Liberal Party organization has grown to embrace people of every walk of life in every community of Newfoundland and Labrador. People who voted Liberal victoriously for the past 22 years are excited about the new strength of their Party. And young people who have never voted before are becoming actively involved in Party policy making and political activity.

Never before in Newfoundland history has there been such sweeping changes in the personnel, policies, and practices of a political party. And these changes were all brought about by the Party itself!

Nobody is more pleased and proud of this program than J. R. Smallwood himself.

Naturally, he is saddened to see some very dear friends, and some comrades-in-arms from the battle for Confederation, pass from the political scene. And he would not be human if he did not regret his own inevitable retirement from active politics but he has allowed for this in the Constitution of the new party. Even with the uncanny health and physical stamina he enjoys in his 71st year, he has said he envies the young men who are just starting out in the exciting and challenging world of Newfoundland politics.

But his first love is his Province and his Party. And the new organization which has been created is one of his greatest triumphs. Now he is sure that the future of Newfoundland and Labrador is in good hands, and that the new Liberals will continue the march of progress that he started 22 years ago.

So, “Joey” has entered the greatest campaign of his career since Confederation. In some respects, his greatest campaign ever.

He has weathered the results of the Federal election of 1968. He has overcome the attempts to divide the Liberal Party. He has stood up against the bitterest and most violent opposition ever launched against a Newfoundland Premier.

Opponents have been prepared to hurt Newfoundland and Labrador if it meant they could hurt Smallwood in the process. It will never be known just how much our Province has lost as the result of unwarranted attacks, criticism, threats, and rumours designed to destroy projects under negotiation in the international business community. The fact that Newfoundland's credit and image abroad remains in excellent shape after the propaganda campaign waged by Smallwood's enemies is a tribute to the Premier and his Liberal administration.

The question is, if these people were willing to hurt the Province just to embarrass Premier Smallwood for their own political advantage, how far will they go to defeat him?

They are involved in their bitterest campaign of all, because it is their last chance to beat the legendary “Joey.” They will be pulling out all the stops. No holds barred. Now or never.

But “Joey” is still stronger than they are.

He was stronger in 1949, and 1951, and 1956, and 1959, and 1962, and 1966. And 1969.

He is stronger because he is still close to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. He has done more for the people of this Province than all the other Newfoundland political leaders in history combined. He admits his mistakes; but he shares his success with the people.

The people know Smallwood. They know what he has accomplished. They know his strength of purpose, his extraordinary talent, his ability to walk in the councils of the mighty or the gardens of the humble.

They know his weaknesses, too, and his human failings.

And they respect him for all this.

They know he is the man who must win this election with his new Liberal team, for Newfoundland's sake.

Because a Liberal victory on October 28 will mean that this great new team of talented Newfoundlanders will be able to go to work on the job of building a Province of prosperity, progress, and opportunity in the Liberal tradition that will guarantee the future of generations to come.

The principles of Liberalism are at stake, and loyal Liberals everywhere are uniting to see that 22 years of progress are not destroyed by hatred, abuse, cynicism, and negativism.

This is why the new Liberal Party, with tens of thousands of workers, will be fighting day and night over the next few weeks in this great campaign.

It will be a campaign unequalled in our history. An unbeatable union of experience and youth as Liberals from the pre-Confederation days join with young families and students to ensure a great Liberal victory and to inspire confidence in our Province's future.

It will be a glorious climax to Joey Smallwood's unbelievable career.

It will be an opportunity for the cream of Newfoundland's political life—the new Liberals—to take command and set the Provincial ship of state on a bold new course.

It will be the greatest victory ever for the Liberal Party.

And most important of all, it will be a victory for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador. A triumph over the threat of a reign of hardship conceived in bitterness.

A new look for Liberalism.

A new opportunity and a new challenge for the Liberal Party.

A new era for Newfoundlanders.

Meet your Liberal candidates

HON. JOSEPH R. SMALLWOOD Placentia East

Premier of Newfoundland and Labrador since he spearheaded the campaign which brought her into Confederation, Joseph Smallwood is a native of Gambo, Bonavista Bay where he was born in December of 1900. He was educated in St. John's and in New York City and he started work as a printer's apprentice in 1915. As a journalist he covered many of the notable events in Newfoundland's recent history and he got a taste of political activity in the United States when he campaigned for Senator Robert M. LaFollette in 1924. Back in his native Newfoundland, Joseph Smallwood organized and reorganized labour unions and fought many battles for hard-working Newfoundlanders such as the railway sectionmen. He resumed his editorial interests about this time and wrote for many publications including the St. John's "Daily Globe" of which he was editor. He wrote books on Newfoundland and on Sir William Coaker and founded the Corner Brook weekly "Humber Herald" which eventually merged with the Western Star. His first taste of Newfoundland politics was in 1932 when, under Sir Richard Squires, he unsuccessfully contested the Bonavista South seat. He organized the Fishermen's Co-operative Union and some years later launched the now-famous Newfoundland radio program "The Barrelman". He was in Montreal in December of 1945 when he learned that a National Convention was to be held in Newfoundland to decide and recommend on a future form of government for Newfoundland. Smallwood at once decided to press for Newfoundland's Confederation with Canada and he started a series of letters to the editor of a St. John's newspaper to promote just that. His fight to have the confederation suggestion placed on the National Convention's ballot paper was not an easy one and he finally appealed over radio to have the addition made to the ballot. He received 50,000 signatures from Newfoundlanders supporting this plan and he formed the Newfoundland Confederate Association in 1948 to back up the proposal. He forwarded the petition to the British Government and a favourable decision was made in London. On the second National Convention ballot, the Confederation proposal won. He was a member of the delegation which went to Ottawa to discuss the terms of Newfoundland's confederation with Canada and on April 1, 1949, Joseph Smallwood became Interim Premier of the new province. He has led the Liberal Party to victory in every provincial election in Newfoundland and Labrador since that date and he has worked tirelessly to promote industry for the province, anxious to supplement her scant basic industries, wrested for so many generations from the sea and the land. Premier Smallwood is married to the former Clara Oates of Carbonear and they have two sons and a daughter. His home is "Newfoundland House", Roache's Line, Conception Bay.

What is a Liberal?

The basic faith of Liberalism is a belief in the worth of man. The basic faith of Newfoundland Liberalism is a belief in the worth of the people who live in this Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

It may be said that there is nothing in this statement that could not be accepted by any other political party. The point to be remembered is that the Liberal Party is the political party, both in Canada as a nation and in Newfoundland and Labrador as a province, which has placed before the people policies and programmes which provide the best opportunity for each citizen, young or old, to prove that worth.

In Canada as a nation, the Liberal Party has been the party in which the people of Canada have placed their faith during forty of the last forty-six years. This did not just happen by luck. It happened because the Canadian people were convinced that the opportunity to achieve their worth has a greater chance of success under the policies and programmes, of the Liberal Party than under those of any other political party.

It is not just by luck that the Liberal Party has been in power for the past twenty-two years in Newfoundland and Labrador. It is because the people of our province, in each of six elections, have recognized that their opportunity to achieve their own worth was greater, not only under the policies and programmes of the Liberal Party, but also under the guidance of those who had the desire and ability to carry them out.

Some say that there is no difference between the Liberals and the Tories. One can understand the New Democratic Party making such a statement for, if such were true, then they would have but one political opponent to overcome. One can also understand the Tories saying so for in doing so they are attempting to associate themselves with the long and creditable history of Liberal improvement and reform.

But there is a difference. It may not be in terms of a clear political philosophy but it certainly is an identifiable attitude to the basic issues that arise in the process of Government.

On the statute books of Canada today there is not one major piece of social legislation that was not put there by a Liberal Government. In the Province of Newfoundland, there is not one major development either before or after Confederation, that was not initiated and completed by a Liberal Government. Down through our long political history, there is a clear strand of progress and reform that is identified with the Liberal Party and with no other major party. Of course there's a difference and that difference is shown, over and over again, in the attitude of liberally minded people toward those things which matter.

One could make a long list of things which matter and the list might be different for different areas of our Province. But some apply to all parts. Examine medical services, medicare and education. Compare these with what existed twenty years ago and one gets some idea of the progress being made. Compare the opportunities for medical attention and university education of today with those of twenty years ago. They are not perfect, of course, and when the demands of the present are met, new demands will take their place and the Liberal attitude will change to meet these new demands in a growing and developing Province. One of the characteristics of liberally minded people is that they can adopt those things which were good in the past and use them to move forward in a world of change. Liberals are not people who think that what was good enough twenty years ago is good enough for today. Nor are they radical enough to move into the future without respect for the lessons of the past. The Liberal Party stands between the Conservative attitude of holding on to the past and the socialist attitude of making changes regardless of the past.

The Liberal Party of today varies greatly with that of one hundred years ago. Some may call this inconsistency. Not so. It is the real evidence that liberally minded people have the ability to promote ideas which are acceptable to those who wish to meet the needs of a rapidly changing Province.

Our young people of today have many ideas unheard of a generation ago. They will need a vehicle whereby they can carry forward and translate these ideas into policies which will make for the general good and improvement of our way of life. The translation of these ideas, if political history proves anything, will find no better vehicle than the Liberal Party which, in the years which are immediately ahead, will achieve a rapid advancement in the industrialization of our Province and the living standards of our people.

In Liberalism for the 70's there will be no need to hew a new party. What will be needed is to show Liberalism in its true light and to maintain a position in accordance with the changing times in which we live and in accordance with our past traditions.

The needs of the 70's for all our people, both young and old, will be met by the Liberal Party in a manner more satisfactory and more durable than by any other major party, for Liberalism is a freeing force and those who wish to advance its doctrines must be prepared to consider, first and foremost, the common people and their right to an enjoyment of their heritage—health services, opportunities for education at all levels, employment in old and new fields of activity and the benefits of the social services which our times demand.

The 60's and 50's, the 40's and all the decades which have gone before brought their challenges. The 70's will be no different. The challenges will be there. Liberals are people who are qualified and capable, willing and able, to adapt to meet these challenges for the benefit of the ordinary man. Everywhere and at all times there are abuses to be reformed, new horizons to be opened and new forces to be developed. One of the great characteristics of Liberalism is that it has been able to attract to its ranks, people who were able to raise their sights above the horizons of their time. Their times have criticized them but the years have proved their wisdom and their foresight. Liberals have not been the dropouts because problems could not be solved over night. They have not fled from the political scene because the responsibilities were heavy and the challenges great. They have not plotted revolutions in a wild attempt to cure everything in a hurry. But they have been the people who, in spite of the steepness, of the hills, have tried to reform and improve a little at a time.

This is not always the most glamorous course. It does not promise quick results. It is neither rash in its judgement nor impetuous in its action. The accumulative effect over the years, however, has reformed and improved the lot of the common man and given to him the time to exercise the greatest of democratic rights—the right of choice.

Who are the Liberals?

This will be the greatest campaign in history for the Liberal Party in Newfoundland.

Never in our 100 years of party politics has there been such an organization of enthusiastic, vigorous supporters.

A veritable army of active Liberals in every corner of the Province.

A force of 48,000 card-carrying Party members.

Over 5,000 campaign workers.

Canvassers, drivers, poll captains, committee workers, people on telephone duty and people handling correspondence—all enthusiastic Liberals drawn from every walk of life in Newfoundland and Labrador.

Over 100 campaign managers and area co-ordinators.

A general campaign committee of 39 outstanding Newfoundlanders.

And of course, the 42 Liberal candidates. Most of them young men—the most talented, capable, and experienced men in Newfoundland public life today. Far and away the greatest slate of candidates ever presented by a political party in our history.

This is the new Liberal organization.

The new team who are determined to win a great victory for their Party on October 28.

They are determined because they know it is vital to Newfoundland and Labrador for the Liberal Party to form the Government that meets the challenge of the crucial 70's. They are dedicated to Liberalism as the only assurance of continued progress for our Province, and new prosperity for our people.

The new team will win, with the active support of loyal Liberals in every part of every district.

But victory on October 28 is not the only objective of this great new Liberal force.

In fact, it is only the beginning.

Who will be the new Liberals?

The job of Party organization will continue, and will expand.

The Party will draw its strength from the District Associations and these organizations will be involved in all aspects of community life. They will provide an essential link between Government and people.

The Party will have a full-time organizational staff to maintain its operations, with field organizers to work with the District Associations.

A concerted effort will be made to attract young Newfoundlanders to the Party, with their new ideas, new approaches, and new vigor.

It will be a strong, healthy Party; and every Liberal will have an opportunity to make a contribution to the community and to the Province, and an opportunity to help shape our policies for the future.

There was never a time when one could feel so proud to be a Liberal. To be an important part of the exciting social change and economic development that lies ahead.

There was never a better time to become a Liberal. In fact, the Liberal Party welcomes all Newfoundlanders who believe in the future of our Province and want to contribute to it.

Be a part of the Party of the Seventies.
